ADAA Names Maureen Bray as New Executive Director

After Linda Blumberg stepped down last September, the Art Dealers Association of America has now announced the appointment of their new executive director, Maureen Bray. Bray brings over twenty years of gallery experience to her new role, having served in leadership positions at three ADAA member galleries and participating in The Art Show for over fifteen years. As a director at David Nolan Gallery since 2014, she helped manage the gallery's artist roster and programming as well as overseeing numerous museum acquisitions and cocurating the 2015 exhibition, "The Confident Line: George Grosz, Andy Warhol, Wardell Milan." Bray currently serves on the organizing committee for the 2018 edition of The Art Show, and was involved in the ADAA's website redesign in 2014.

Prior to David Nolan Gallery, Bray was a director at Sean Kelly Gallery for seven years during the gallery's expansion and move to Hudson Yards in 2012. Bray began her career at C&M Arts, where she worked for ten years and advanced to the position of director of exhibitions. During her tenure there, the gallery mounted such major scholarly exhibitions as "Jeff Koons: Highlights of 25 Years," "Tom Wesselmann: The Sixties," and "Yves Klein: A Career Survey."
